“Reflections on a Forgotten Crisis”

In the early 1980s, MSU was adversely affected by a substantial budget shortfall. All departments, colleges, units, and programs at MSU were involved in coordinated planning and budget reduction processes. These processes resulted in the curtailment, elimination and modification of many programs, with serious impact on many faculty and staff. This presentation consists of reflections on these processes and on the experience of participation. The crisis signaled an important step in the systemic emergence of MSU as a university responsive to the efficiencies of markets and harmonious with neoliberal principles.
